CECILSTOWN.

Sub post-office, 27 miles from Cork and 6 from Mallow (head office). Lohort castle, the property of the Earl of Egmont, and believed to have been built in the reign of King John, is one of the finest old castles in Ireland, and contains some handsome apartments. It is 80 feet high, with walls ten feet thick, and was originally surrounded by a deep moat. Ballygiblin, the seat of Sir Henry Wrixon Becher, Bart., is an elegant mansion of some antiquity, but recently modernised with great taste. The soil is generally fertile, producing excellent crops, and there are several large dairy farms. The parish of Castlemagner derives its name from a family of the same name, to whom this part of the county formerly belonged.

CHARLEVILLE.

Head post, money-order, and telegraph office, and market town, on the borders of the county Limerick; 35 miles from Cork, Gt. Southern and Western Ry.—fares, single 7/-, 5/4, 3/-; return 12/-, 9/-, 5/-. Charleville, the most northern town in the county, was so named by its founder, the Earl of Orrery, in honour of Charles II.; its ancient name was Rathgoggan. By charter granted in 1671, to Roger, Earl of Orrery, this town was made a free borough, and the inhabitants incorporated, under the designation of the "sovereign, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Charleville." The corporation consisted of a sovereign, two bailiffs, twelve burgesses, and an indefinite number of freemen. The sovereign and bailiffs were elected annually from the burgesses by the corporation, and the burgesses were elected by the freemen as vacancies occurred by death or otherwise. The charter conferred upon the corporation the privilege of returning two members to the Irish parliament, which was regularly exercised till the Union, when the borough was disfranchised. The corporation is since extinct, and the town has now no local government. The public buildings consist of three banks, a Convent of Mercy, Christian Brothers' schools, National schools, Protestant church, and a Catholic church with a fine painting of the Crucifixion on the high altar—all very handsome structures. John McDonnell, commonly called Shane Clarach M'Donnell, a celebrated Jacobite bard, who died in 1754, resided here for several years, and was buried within the ruined church of Ballysally, a quarter mile south of the town. The Earl of Cork and Orrery is the principal proprietor, and has a patent for holding six fairs annually, and markets every Wednesday and Saturday. Six new fairs have been recently founded here, which are toll free, unless falling on the old market day (Wednesday). This rising town possesses great advantages, being the junction of the Cork and Limerick Direct Railway, and seated in the midst of a rich and well watered agricultural and pastoral district.

CLONAKILTY.

Sub post, money-order, and telegraph office, 32 miles from Cork, 13 miles from Bandon (head office), and 10 from Enniskeane, a station on the West Cork Ry. Clonakilty (previously spelt Cloughnakilty), founded by the first Earl of Cork, is a seaport town in the west riding, the corn trade of which was considerable, vessels of 150 tons trading to and from the port; the principal imports now are coal, timber, and Indian corn. The bay of Clonakilty is spacious, but ill-protected; the bar at the entrance is a great hindrance, and the port generally is indifferent. In 1613 a charter was granted to the town by James I., by which the inhabitants were incorporated as "the sovereign, free burgesses, and commonalty of the borough of Cloughnakilty." The right of sending two members to Parliament was conferred on the town by this charter, a privilege it continued to exercise until the passing of the Act of Union in 1800, when it was disfranchised. The principal buildings consist of a Protestant church, Roman Catholic church, convent of Sisters of Mercy, Presbyterian and Wesleyan chapels, a small infantry barracks, market house, inns, etc. It is now governed by Commissioners, under the provision of the "Towns' Improvement Act." Clonakilty was once celebrated for its linen yarn, and on market days large sums were expended on the purchase of this—for over two centuries its staple product; but the yarn trade has died out, and the town now relies for support on its dealings with the farmers in the neighbourhood. Butter, eggs, and fowl are largely bought for exportation. Dr. Smith says, "The town flourished greatly before the wars of 1641, but being then entirely burnt down it has since but slowly recovered." The same writer also gives a description of the remains of an ancient heathen temple, or stone circle, about two miles to the north-east of Clonakilty, in the parish of Kilgarriff. The Rev. Dr. Collins, R.C. bishop of Cloyne and Ross, was born at Clonakilty; it is also the birth place of Leon Deasy, of the Court of Exchequer, member for co. Cork 1855-60. There was formed by a classical endowed school here, of considerable repute: the Right Hon. Mountford Longfield (known as Judge Longfield, of the Landed Estates' Court) was educated there, and many others of the gentry and clergy. It has now ceased to exist, Arunde mills is a village on Clonakilty harbour. "The tract called Ibawn (the fair) territory, was, after the coming in of the English, wrested from the old proprietors, by Lord Arundel of the Strand, and from him it fell to the Barmore family. There are the remains of an ancient castle on the strand of Clonakilty, formerly called Arundel castle, but now called the castle."—Smith's Hist. In the mouth of the bay is the Island of Inchidounny. Sulphate of barytes occurs at Muckruss and Mountain common, parish of Ardfield.
