The Irish Language—In County and City of Cork, Census 1911, the English and Irish speakers numbered 83,340, Irish only 538.

ADMINISTRATIVE AREAS.

For Judicial purposes the County is divided into East and West Ridings and 23 baronies (the former administrative areas of the county before the passing of the Local Government Act, 1898), and again into 243 Civil parishes, sub-divided into 5,478 townlands. The county has 6 Quarter Sessions, 56 Petty Sessions, and 17 Constabulary districts. Military Headquarters at Cork. Naval Headquarters at Queenstown, and Naval bases at Queenstown and Castletownbere; four Coastguard divisions and 12 lighthouses, with a coast line of about 110 miles. For Local Government purposes the County has 32 Electoral Divisions, each represented in the County Council by an elected Councillor, and is further administered by 18 Rural District Councils, who also exercise Poor Law jurisdiction. The Rural Districts are sub-divided into electoral divisions, and Dispensary and Registration divisions are composed of a certain number of these electoral divisions. The County also contains nine Towns and two Townships under local government.

The City of Cork is divided, for elective purposes, into seven wards, represented by 14 Aldermen and 42 Councillors.

MAYORS AND HIGH SHERIFFS OF CORK, 1841—1921.

Between the reigns of King John and George II. the City of Cork received no less than seventeen Charters. The first Anglo-Norman Provost was appointed in 1199, and the first Mayor in 1272, succeeded by a long line of Chief Magistrates (save during the Commonwealth) to the present time. The Municipal Reform Act of 1841 effected extensive changes in the corporation system. The elective constituency was changed, and the greater portion of the ancient Liberties transferred to the County under the name of the Barony of Cork. The practice of electing two sheriffs was abolished by the Act, and the appointment of one vested in the Crown. Nominations are made by the Town Council. The following are lists of the Mayors and Sheriffs of the Reformed Corporation:—
